The downtown shops were so full of returned society and summer reminiscences last week as to resemble "five o'clocks" on the continuous plan. Everybody is back, at least almost everybody; and the first natural feminine impulse is a grand rush for new clothes. We appear to be in for an early fall, and consequently there can be no wearing out of our summer things dur-ing September and early October. Indeed every woman whom I saw last week seemed very glad to crawl into a heavy cont, and the light-weight silk affairs which have done such smart duty at the resorts are far too flimsy in texture, unless they are lined with lamb's wool throughout, as one exceedingly bright Hotel Beers young ma-tron has had done to her very stylish short coat of moire. As she is slender the wool gives her a most pleasant and becoming rotundity, and a fuliness across the shoul-ders that could not be obtained by any other means. Then she can wear it with the lamb's wool lining until the very last moment before donning winter furs, which is exactly her intention.

There are pleasant rumors about the debutantes and much speculation as to gayety of the coming season. It is a little too early to make predictions, but, as last winter by no means came up to social expectations, and, as there are several girls to make their first bow to society who belong to large and socially influential families. one may conclude that we shall be at least tolerably gay.

My Jamestown correspondent tells me that Elizabeth Howell Plummer was a lit-tle late in arriving at St. Matthew's Church with her string of bridesmaids on the afternoon of the wedding, which was Monday of last week, but that the waiting crowd of fashionables was amply repaid for the de-lay by the beauty of the bride and her maidens. Jamestown quite went wild over the picture. Her gown was a wonderful creation of white satin, covered with rare old point lace, while the maids, among whom was Lily Belle Pierce, the bride-groom's sister, were frocked in filmy pink chiffon, with big picture hats of the same material, garlanded with roses in different Pink and white hydrangeas and the same Pink and white hydrangeas and the same two colors in roses were used entirely for decorative purposes. The church was a perfect bower of flowers. It is small and eastly arranged, florally. The bride gave her maids pearl pins and a pearl locket to the maid of honor, while Mr. Pierce presented his ushers and best man with pearl scarf pins that corresponded in design.

Bevery printed report of the wedding col-lation has called it a "breakfast," so, even if the hour was a late afternoon one—the ceremony being at 4 o'clock—perhaps "breakfast" is brand new. At all events, if you are interested 'n knowing what people in the East are eating these days at such wedding "breakfasts," here is the menu, which was served at small tables at the Admiral Porter villa, where Mrs. Plummer

Apropos the September weddings I heard a very amusing little incident that hap-pened a week or so ago at the Miller-Doller marriage, or rather that followed it. Miss Martha Miller, the bride, invited two small girls of 9 and 10 to be her bridesmalds. re Miss Hazel Quinn and Mis They were Miss Hazer Quinn and all and Jeannette Brinkman, and it is needless to say that both youthful maids were hugely delighted to be so honored, and that they conducted themselves in the most bitdesmaidy manner possible. The ceremony went off beautifully, the bridesmaids ap-peared in charming white frocks and marched in shead of the bride with great

After supper the bride and bridegroom took their immediate departure for the West, and as the wedding was small and informal-only relatives and near friends-a Station to see them off. The bridesmaids insisted on driving down with Mr. and Mrs. Doller. They bade affectionate adieux and then climbed back into their carriage to be driven home, after giving their sepa-rate house numbers to the coachman with great dignity.

Now, it is a long drive from Union Station to Union boulevard, where Miss Brinkham lives. And the hour was close to 19 o'clock and the day a most exciting one for small girls. The rubber-tired carriage olled along easily and the bridesmaids put their little faces close to the windows wh were closed, as the night was chill, and discussed the wedding quite like their elders. Chirrupy voices went on as Grand was reached and passed. Then came Vandeventer and Taylor and at last the carriage reached Union and turned north to the Brinkman resi-Horses stopped, the coachman got down off his box, opened the door with a respectful flourish and inquired: Which of you ladies is to get out at Silence, deep and profound. He cleared his throat and repeated his question. More silence. Then he cautiously put his head closer to

Certainly, a widow may have a maid of honor, also bridesmaids, if she wishes. It is perfectly proper. At a recent wedding in New York, the bride, who was a widow, was attended by her most intimate friend, a young girl; and also by her married sister. Who served as matter of honor. There ter, who served as matron of honor. There are no restrictions, except in the metter of the bride's costume. You must not wear a white wedding gown. Pale blue is a favorite one for young widows, and usually most becoming and elegant-looking Silver gray would look well if you are past the youthful pale blue age.

"and I'm so afraid they are going to occupy the flat above us. They came to look at it only this morning and I heard the mother say as she went down the steps that it suited her exactly," said the tall

"Aren't they nice people, or what's the matter?" questioned the short onc.
"Oh, yes, I guess they're nice cnough and all that." replied the tail one, "but do you know they lived above the Blanks last winter, and Mrs. Blank told me the other day that they never burned a thing the whole season of cold weather but gas in their grates and in the kitchen, and the Blanks had a terrible time heating their own flat with only gas going above them." "How unprincipled," murmured the short one, sympathetically, "People ought to consider their neighbors more, don't you think so? I do hope they won't move in above you. Oh, do you get off here? Do come and see me soon, dear! Good-by!
